Editorial

We Are The World was a significant event in American pop music history, with so many great artists coming together to record and film a song for the USA for Africa campaign. Inspired by Bob Geldof's super group Band Aid who recorded "Do They Know It's Christmas" and the Live Aid concerts, the idea that gave birth to "We Are The World" came from Harry Belafonte. Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie wrote what would become an award winning song and a massive hit record that achieved so much to alleviate hunger in Ethiopia. It was also the last song Michael performed live in front of an audience when he joined in with the choir at the World Music Awards in London in 2006. ➡

The new Netflix documentary, "The Greatest Night in Pop," brings that heady time back to life, breathing fresh air into an industry which has currently seems to be devolving into something other than a benevolent reflection of current popular culture. I hope that all MJ fans are able to see and enjoy the film as I certainly did. If it moves you to tears, you are not alone! Its premiere at the Sundance Film Festival was a delicious irony, considering the festival program back in 2019 spear-headed a high-profile, unsuccessful attempt to cancel the memory and legacy of the world's greatest entertainer and selfless humanitarian.

This issue of A Candle for Michael Newsletter is respectfully dedicated to MJ fan Melanie Freeman (@mellie4justice) of NYC who passed away unexpectedly last month. Read a wonderful obituary to her here. Mel will be very much missed.

Wishing you peace and happiness and very happy Michaeling!

• Huey Lewis on recording "We Are The World"

Smooth Radio recently shared some clips of Michael looking seemingly puzzled during Huey Lewis' contribution during the recording of 'We Are The World,' suggesting that Michael was reacting to Huey's singing. The accompanying article included Huey's comments on working with Michael, which he gave to Entertainment Weekly in 2009. "I stood right next to him on the solo lines, because I had the line right after he did," Huey said. "We had to share a position there for a couple hours. And we chatted. He said lots of nice things about my songs, and he knew our stuff, and he was just sweet, sweet, sweet...Obviously, what can be said about the guy? Super talented, and super fabulous, and super sweet at the same time. He was very comfortable. He was just really nice, man. Michael was just a really sweet guy."

• New Hot 100 Hit – 50 years after its release!

As reported by Forbes on 4 Jan, Michael and his brothers hit No. 43 on the list of the most-consumed tracks in the US with "I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus." The article reminds us: "I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus' reaches the Hot 100 more than half a century after it was first released. The sibling band put the cut out in 1970, and it has become the most famous version of the track, which didn't originate with the Jackson 5." After the festive season, The Essential Michael Jackson compilation reappeared on at least three charts as also reported by Forbes, while the J5's Christmas album dropped out. News of Note

- “We Are The World” Netflix documentary
 “The Greatest Night in Pop” a film about the making of ‘We are the World,’ premiered at the Sundance Film Festival on Jan 19 where it was followed by a conversation with Lionel Richie, director Bao Nguyen, and producer Julia Nottingham. Lionel, who co-authored the song with Michael, explains: “The writing wasn’t difficult because we both knew what we had to do and where we wanted to go. It’s like basketball players – they know how to play basketball. We just had to figure out what were the right words, what’s the right melody? And having him as a partner was everything.” In the film, Lionel tells the story (complete with snake hisses) of Michael’s pet python appearing over his shoulder at one songwriting session. We also see Stevie Wonder help Bob Dylan get in the groove by playing Bob’s part on the piano and singing the line in Bob’s voice! The film includes interviews with many of the artists who were in the recording studio on that special night, as well as some of the musicians, engineers, and production crew. The Greatest Night in Pop is produced by Lionel Richie, Julia Nottingham, Bruce Eskowitz, Larry Klein, Harriet Sternberg, and George Hencken. Stream it on Netflix, or watch the trailer here. Read a review from the Sundance premiere here. Watch a clip of Michael talking about writing “We Are The World” as he remembered it, on Twitter/X.
- Release date announced for “Michael” biopic
 The MJ biopic will be released on 18 April 2025 according to an official announcement. Filming commencing on Jan 22, and a photo of Michael’s nephew Jafaar Jackson in the role of MJ was shared in the media. The young actor who will play the coveted role of Michael as a child is nine year old Juliano Krue Valdi. The part of Joseph Jackson has gone to Colman Domingo with Nia Long as Katherine. Deadline has also advised that Top Gun: Maverick and Whiplash star Miles Teller is hoping to secure the role of one of Michael’s lawyers in the film, but this has yet to be officially confirmed.
- Experiencing MJ in the Studio – Dave Way
 Dave Way is a mixer, recording engineer, producer and songwriter who worked with Michael on the Dangerous album. In an excerpt from an interview posted on YouTube by Inside Blackbird, he talks about the experience of meeting and working with Michael in the studio. Watch it here.

 The good news for students of Michael Jackson academic studies is that Elizabeth Amisu’s 2016 book The Dangerous Philosophies of Michael Jackson is being released in April in a paperback edition by the publishers Bloomsbury. Orders can be placed now through their website.
- The Wiz on the big screen in Melbourne
 Want to see Michael as the Scarecrow in The Wiz (1978) on a big screen? - The real numbers on ‘This is It’ vs. Taylor Swift
 As noted by many MJ fans on social media, Taylor Swift’s Eras tour concert film has not surpassed This Is It as the highest grossing concert film ever (in the US), because This Is It is not a concert film, as stated by Michael’s nephew Taj on X, who pointed out that to achieve this headline Billboard had combined two completely separate film categories. The Guinness World Records office confirmed this on X. Readers added context with the following details: “This Is It by Michael Jackson, a documentary, not a concert film, earned $380M (inflation calculated) globally and was only in theatres for 5 weeks. Swift’s Eras Tour...a concert film, not a documentary, grossed $2661.6M and has been in theatres for over 13 weeks.” An article from Business Insider, India, noted that, even if This Is It was counted in the same category as the Taylor Swift film, Michael still comes out a winner on a world-wide basis. Check out their calculations here.
- Explanation of Michael’s name on Epstein list
 The tabloid media had a field day recently when previously sealed documents relating to the Jeffrey Epstein sexual abuse scandal and trial of his partner Ghislaine Maxwell were released, revealing that Michael had visited Epstein’s house in Palm Beach. However, as confirmed by one of the couple’s victims and reported by Billboard, “There are no allegations of any wrongdoing on Jackson’s part in the documents.” Michael’s name came up during the deposition of a witness back in 2016 who confirmed meeting him at Epstein’s Palm Springs Mansion, but swore under oath there was no wrongdoing on Michael’s part. As a high profile financial advisor, Epstein was known for his associations with well-known public figures and politicians. Michael’s meeting with Epstein occurred before the latter had been accused of any abuse. Michael’s phone number in the financier’s list of contacts actually belonged to a lawyer acting for Michael’s own financial advisor at the time. Michael never visited Epstein’s infamous island where a lot of the abuse took place, and only visited the Palm Beach mansion once to seek financial advice.
- Michael in a Mary Poppins sequel?
 A curious story popped up on Collider about Michael supposedly being named to star in a Mary Poppins movie sequel that never happened. According to Kendall Myers, who wrote the story, Disney intended to make a sequel to the Julie Andrews hit musical film in the 1980s, only Julie herself declined to reprise her role. Michael “was expected to play the male lead in place of Bert, being an ice cream seller and Bert’s brother.” Without Julie available to play Mary, the project did not go ahead. (I have to admit to never having heard this story before and certainly don’t know if it’s true! – Kerry)
- Dan Reed contacting fans re Leaving Neverland 2
 On the Popcorned Planet YouTube channel, long-time MJ fan Jenny Winings has revealed that some fans have been contacted by Dan Reed’s team working on Leaving Neverland 2. He wants it to appear like he is providing a balanced view this time around. Do not be fooled. Chuck from the Estate’s Online Team shared the link to the video and recommended that other fans take heed of Jenny’s warning. “I encourage you all to watch the exchange...in case you, like Jenny, are contacted by someone from Dan Reed’s team and have questions or want more information...Thank you for checking this out and I wish you all a happy new year.”
